SHOOTING.

EAST HANTS GROUNDS, PORTSMOUTH.

On Tuesday last all the crack shots of the county assembled at these grounds to shoot for the fat hog; 12 members at 10s. each, 21 yds rise, from three traps, 5 yds apart, 80 yds boundary, 14 or 15 shot. Money or the pork at the option of the winner. The following is the result:—

Mr. Pettit	1111101-6
Mr. Shotton	1111101-5
Mr. Warrell	1111100-5
Major Mitchell	1110111-6
Mr. Beckwith, 3rd Regiment	1000-1
Captain Roberts, R.N.	0101010-3
Captain Harris, R.N.	01000-1
Mr. Windelbank	101110-4
Mr. Haig	1110-3
Mr. Barnaby	010-1
Mr. Smith	1101111-6
Mr. Fletcher	0111111-6
Mr. Williams	000
Mr. Turnour	010
Lieutenant Bettle, R.N.	0110

Major Mitchell, Mr. Pettit, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Fletcher having tied, agreed to divide, so took the money instead of the pig. Prior to the pigeon shooting there were several sweepstakes at sparrows. Messrs. Smith and Cousin tied for the first, killing 4 out of 5, and divided. The 2nd was a tie, by Major Mitchell, Messrs. Windelbank and Cudlipp, killing 4 out of 5. They also divided. The 3rd was won by Mr. Page, killing all. There was also a sweepstakes of 21 each at 5 pigeons each, usual conditions. Mr. Wilderess won, killing all. As coincidence took place in the afternoon which caused some merriment to the lookers-on, but to the no little consternation of those concerned. A few lye pigeons had been shot, when the wind shifted, bringing on a driving sleet, and it was found necessary to change quarters to another booth to the east of the ground. Through some inadvertence of the trapper the basket was left open, and in a few moments upwards of two dozen of the pigeons escaped their prison home, and, though volley after volley was poured after them, not one was killed. The birds were supplied by Hammond, and were first-class.

LANCASTER.—On Monday, the 2nd inst., a match at 9 birds each, for £5 a side, between Mr. Charles Crowsley, of Denbigh Dale, near Sheffield, and Mr. John Bradley, of the Dalton's Arms, Bulk, near Lancaster, came off in a field at Bulk. Mr. Bradley killing 7 out of his 9 birds, when Mr. Crowsley had only killed 5 out of 8, the latter gave up the match, and Mr. Bradley was declared the winner. The score was as follows:—
Bradley 110011111-7
Crowsley 00111101-4

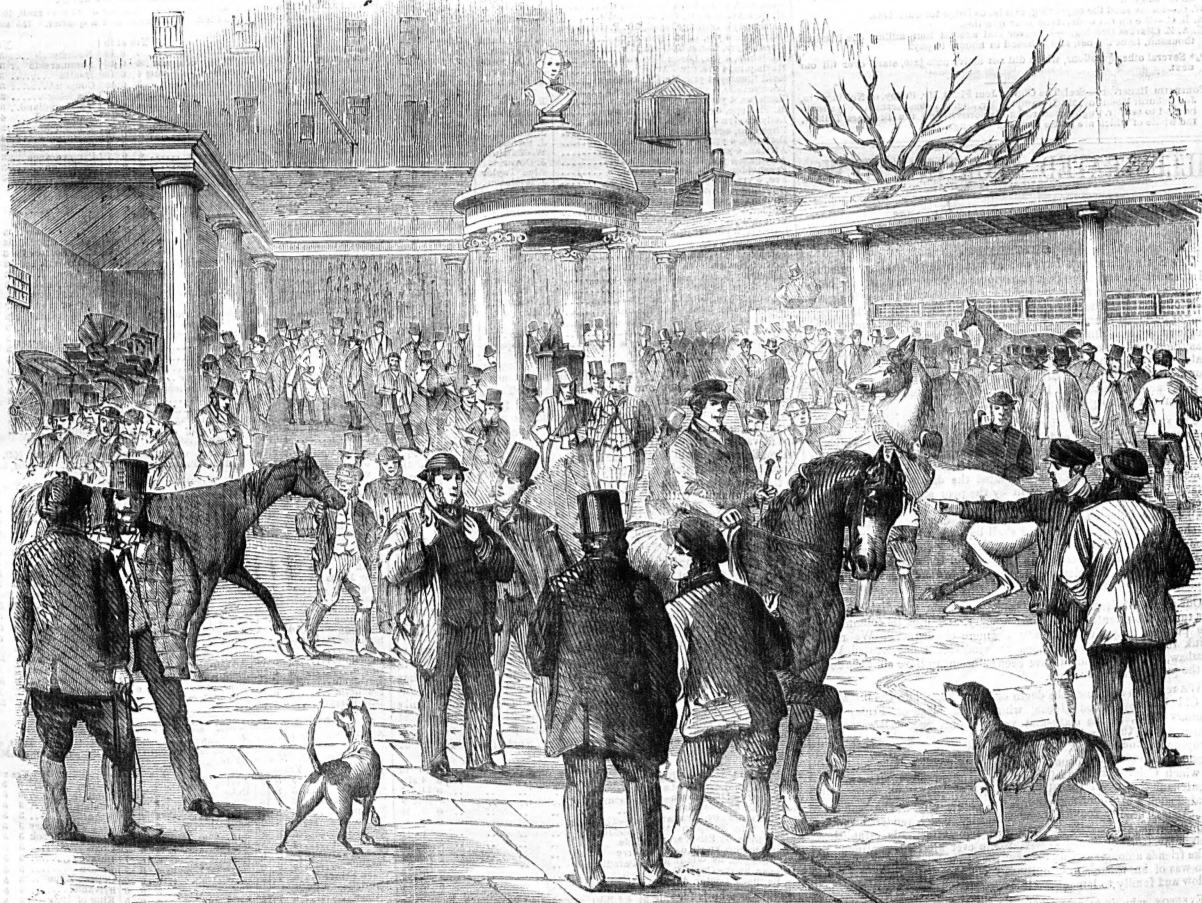

Subsequently a sweepstakes was shot for, in which there were six entries, at seven birds each, when the first prize was won by Mr. Crowsley, who killed all his birds; and the second by James Poole, of Wendermers.

KNURR AND SPELL.

CONGLOR.—Thomas Riley will play J. Cockcroft again at Knurr and Spell, on the same conditions as the last, for £5 or £25 a side; Wm. Berry, of the Farmers' Arms, to be stakeholder and referee. A match can be made at any time at the above-named place. Riley hopes Cockrofts will come forward and make a match, after publicly challenging him in this paper.

BILLIARDS.

"CHAMPION OF THE WORLD" is the title by which Robert, the billiard player, is now known in England. We object emphatically, because he has not yet proven himself so to be.—New York Clipper, Jan. 17.

GEORGE CLAYTON, of Rochdale, and James Wild, of Milnrow, near Rochdale, are matched to wrestle two back-falls out of three, Lancashire fashion, for £10 a side, at Higginshaw Grounds, Oldham, on Saturday, February 28; Wild not to exceed 7 stone 15lb, and Clayton at catch weight; all foul play barred out. 10s. a side is now down in the hands of Mr. J. Chadwick, the proprietor of the grounds, who is to be final stakeholder; to be made into 25 a side to-day (Saturday), at ten o'clock at night, at the house of Mr. W. Lund, Jubilee Inn, near Rochdale.

SCHORA AND MEADOWCROFT.—Mr. Thomas Warren now has £5 a side for a match between these men to wrestle for £25 a side and the Champion's Cup, now held by Schora. To come off at the Snipe Inn, Audenshaw, on Saturday, March 7.

SHEFFIELD V. PITMEOR.—On Saturday the return match was played between these clubs on the Ground at B. Bank. Pitmeor won the toss and very soon gained a goal, and lost one also as soon to their opponents, both parties being again equal. Some scrambling play succeeded, neither party making much head against the other for nearly an hour, when Pitmeor were fortunate in securing a goal, thereby putting the Sheffield players on their mettle, but the did not succeed in rubbing it off before time was called. The Sheffield gentlemen have had therefore to succumb to their junior competitors in both the games of this season.

NORFOLK V. MACKENZIE.—A game at football was played at Norfolk Park on Saturday, 31st Oct., between the above clubs, 12 on each side. The game was well contested, particularly during the first hour. During the second hour the Norfolk players, who were their opponents they could finish the game as they commenced with spirit, which finally terminated with an easy victory for them, by obtaining 2 goals and 1 rouge, against Mackenzie 1 rouge.

GREAT COBLE RACE ON ELYTH RIVER.
(From our own Reporter.)

(From our own Reporter.)

This important event, which has attracted considerable attention in [illegible]

From an early hour on the morning of the race the salubrious town of Blyth was thrown into a state of perpetual excitement consequent upon the coming sensational encounter that would take place; groups of eager and excited "Geordies" might be congregated at various parts, discussing with all gusto the merits and defects of each competitor, and occasionally as the matter suited a general movement towards a knowing "hinney," who would Hope having won the toss, chose the north side, Wilson lying about four lengths to the south. The distance to be rowed was one mile, and little more than 200 yards in and out, or from the North Ballast Crane to the finish, a short way about the Bear Inn. The race was a grand finish at the place, and the river was considerably disturbed by a stormy south-west wind, the lipper being anything but encouraging for a tussle in lilliputian keels. Notwithstanding that Hope is upwards of two stones heavier and two inches taller than his opponent, the disparity as the men sat their boats was not at all manifest, in fact the difference looked quite the other way, and had we not waited the information, "Wilson was trained for rowing," we might have concluded that the heavier was the better. Wilson's antagonist was James Hull, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, was brought to the scratch in a really prime condition, every muscle being well developed and void of even a vestige of superfluous flesh. Hope, on the other hand, was not half that could be desired—in fact, his training must have been altogether neglected. This serious defect was a great disadvantage to him, and he was obliged to hold terribly firm at the finish. The comers and batans having been immured in suitable positions for a go, everything was got in readiness, and without any fiddling or dodging, the winner immediately made a splendid start at precisely six minutes past one o'clock; and Hope, who proved somewhat feeble, pulling most gamely, before thirty yards had been covered, was well on his artistic length; he was, in fact, the style of the others, rowing, the difference of a very palpable description—Wilson's easy and manly manner being immeasurably superior to the laboring and affected go-a-head principle of the other, and it required very little judgment to perceive that if Wilson could last the battle out his strokes would tell a tale. After proceeding a short way further in their course, Teasdale got his oars fairly into play, and without much difficulty pushed his unwieldy craft onwards, and led the race, and shouts of approval were given to the style of the victor, and the rowing artists urging them on most strenuously, and bravely. Wilson's rowers answer the call by pulling with a fearful determination, and first place; however, Teasdale almost immediately shook him off, and before they had reached the quarter mile led by five or six lengths. From this point to the half distance the two were neck and neck, inasmuch as Wilson, who rowed "go-a-head," pulled with confidence, although steering decidedly well. Wilson's boat was so arranged that—as to the position of the oars—he could by simply changing position, pull in the stern, or fore, this was, without doubt, an admirable advantage, and his superior artifice was of a most exciting nature. Wilson's double. Teasdale kept close in to the south side for a pretty freely, drove him home. This was a most critical period of the race, and the most exciting. Teasdale's looked unaccountably uncomfortable, and he was over his boat. The backers of "Hart" were blue at this unexpected crisis, and the consequence of the mishap, lessened the quantity, however, never forsook him, and, actually veered his craft completely. He exclaimed, "I am not a champion," the alteration proved of no avail; at this point, and in fact to the finish, was frequently resort to one oar to battle with his invincible enemy. As now of a most animating and exciting description, was all hopeful, rowing with most fortitude and gameness, and the sands were therefore, in the rear, the enthusiasm of their feelings in loud and prolonged shouts, which gave a half a mile of the terminus, was, much in favour of his beautiful, steady strokes telling greatly at every reaction, although he had decidedly the worst of the course, he never, still not without great exertion, managed to increase, though not thirty yards. The Champion's difficulties were, however, lessened, and despite every precaution he was second time compelled to turn his back on the finish, and most; this delay again allowed Hope to approach his opponent, we should say the difference between them at a quarter of the from the finish was not more than two lengths and a half. The of the race was accordingly a matter of much uncertainty, and the ultimate success of the pitman war as to the exactness of his estimate, and the pace the combatants were straining against the tide was a grand sight, and the scene a striking contrast to a stir all along in the tide, and the remainder of this novel contest was finished without any marked, although Hope was about 150 yards from the Crane in his progress for a few moments by accidentally running foul, and thus extending his only chance of winning, he brought both boats on until about 30 yards from the finish, a struggle, in proving the conqueror for the first time, was comparatively fresh—Hope on the other hand being somewhat tired. The time occupied, according to our own timing, was about 15 minutes, which was tolerably good considering the many disadvantages of the pitman people; against; there were, however, several reasons why this was a material difference, the distance in 20 min. We understand that the heavier, and about 1 ft higher than the other, Wilson's being several feet with the contest, it was conducted with every earnestness to doubt the issue would prove a fatal blow to the pitman must, however, recollect that strength in boat rowing is mere cipher without science. The winning oars were constructed by Mr. Jewitt, the celebrated boat builder, of London, and were of the best specimens and answered admirably. Mr. R. Wilson was umpire for the occasion, and Mr. Harry Clasper acted as referee. The names of the men were David and Mr. John Adams, as backers of Teasdale, and Mr. John Adams, as backers of Wilson.

She further sustains the sorrow from her husband, who is a by plunging into a round of "Whiskey." She is also aware of her husband's mother's spirit, who is at length aggravated by the surgeon, who had attended her husband's death, and himself a witness on the scene. Ignorant of heartless and disgusting practices and customs, she is entangled by a French nobleman, who is well known in England, to the doctor, to whom he conceptual, is very certain. It does not follow, because there can be but perfect picture, that there can be no likeness of a lesser correctness. Even lack of cast iron leading men may have a glimmering idea of an outline of a subject and, all the way up to a Wallace and a Keats, the picture may be different in distinctness and in perfection of detail, until, to use the words of the poet, "You have the Jew that Shakespeare drew." As for the first-class class, the Keats and the Wallace and the Keats, I am content to place this by Mr. Brandmann. While not prepared to place him the very next, I set even with them as (in this part) a true artist. — Review, in Western Spirit, Times, Jan. 24, 1882.

An ERRONEOUS IMPRESSION.—A great many persons have somehow or other got a long time past laboured under a very erroneous impression with respect to Johnson's Royal Medal Box of Water Colours, which they seem to think is a toy for children, whereas it is adapted for the use of artists and amateurs, young and old, rich and poor, gentlemen and ladies, families and individuals; and in short it would be difficult to name those "millions," as it were, of what rank or station, could more advantageously lay out a small sum of money than in purchasing one of these boxes. gesting, Slina, and Mordock, should play for money); or Anderson, Slina, and Mordock. We are of opinion that none of the above trios would be worth laying odds against, and that a single legitimate match; and if any proof of the soundness of our argument were wanting, we ask how was it that the three Cambridge pets should have cut so sorry a figure when opposed in a single cricket match at the Cambridge Ground, Nottingham, by R. Dait, Jackson, and (we think) Finlay. We leave our readers to judge of the matter for themselves.

At the end of next autumn the veteran Parr takes his eleven out to no colony of Australia, and a rare eleven it will be, we can assure our readers—not composed of one or two cricketing counties alone, but of a select group of players of the strength of his team, so that each and all may be fully satisfied. Richard, we have determined not to let out, through business engagements; and we expect several other players, which we shall give full notice of in due time. We are very sorry to wish to mention now. We think it very inconsistent, and, to our ears, a little unbecomingly, that a man in Australia, to make any objection to Edgar Wisler, as they have in England, should be a cricketer himself, too strong for them. Verily, the Fates seem to ground that his father, than whom a better cricketer and better fellow against the opposition, never lived, should have been a cricketer himself. We hope this quibble will not be pressed, because Wisler would certainly like to make one of the eleven, and we are earnestly wishing him success.

THE CRICKET SEASON OF 1862.

(Written expressly for the "Illustrated Sporting News")

We commence our innings this week with the doings of the county of Cambridgeshire, remarkable as the home of England's two finest batsmen—perhaps the best the world ever beheld—Robert Carpenter and Thomas Hayward. We intend at a future time to advert to the merits of all our best cricketers, when we shall have something to say descriptive of the peculiar style of play of the two Cambridge "guns," those feats with the willow have called forth the unequalled exploits of all levers of England's national pastime. Cambridge cricket has been the cause of the greatest good to the county, the money and exertion of a few gentlemen of the old sort who are still left alive, the game would undoubtedly soon die out of existence. This next season we understand that the usual matches with Surrey will pass as regards the county, and we shall not be surprised to find a falling cricket can turn a rainy day. We are sorry to say this, because Cambridgeshire is a county into the field, who are not to be beaten easily; and with such a bowler as Carpenter, who has been as he is, they might very soon (with some fresh hands and warm hearty county to the fore) be made capable of competing with any county in the country. We must say, however, that the county cricket is not the best that will suit the people, may be so in our earnest wish, and we hope managers to play five matches for the better. Last season Cambridge did not bad at all when all circumstances were taken into consideration—playing only ten men instead of eleven in the county. Their first match was with Nottingham, played on Penner's Ground.
